Reasons Why Kids Need to Be in School

Regular, daily school attendance is crucial for children to succeed in learning and developing skills that will serve them for a lifetime. An absence may be needed for an illness, but parents are urged not to plan vacations, schedule non-urgent appointments, or let students stay home during school hours.

Social Development: The school setting provides dynamic experiences when building relationships. Students learn how to interact with adults like teachers, librarians, campus staff and coaches; engage with classmates and the student body; and make friends with whom to talk and play. As an added bonus, at school, teachers and school counselors are available with guidance if students need help navigating these interactions.
